

Day 4

Day 4 of the Copper River Stewardship program started off by going to Valdez. We went to the RCAC Center and learned about the Exxon oil spill in 1989. We also did some hands on practicing on what we would do if there was an oil spill. Then we got on a sailboat and headed off towards Cordova. We sailed right on top of the silt output of the Copper River. We spent the night on the bow of the boat laying down and singing songs. But we also took plankton samples and salinity tests. We preserved the plankton samples in containers of alcohol to test later in Cordova at the Cordova Science Center. We also hung out on the back of the boat and talked. In the evenings we would have dinner... and a little dessert. We played with our food!
